Introduction

There are 8,972 Monroe County probate files stored in 389 boxes in the Research Library. They comprise all that exist for Monroe County from 1818 to about 1960. Probate records after that are held by the Monroe County Clerk's office. This surname index aids in locating the records, by box and file numbers. The Research Library manager or volunteers can retrieve the files for researchers.

“Probate” refers to the legal process by which a will is found legal (proved), and the assets of a deceased person's estate are properly declared, assessed for value, and distributed, either by the will, or if there is no will, by local law. For most of the period covered by these records, Indiana law provided that if the estate's worth was less than $500, the full probate process was not needed, and therefore not all deceased persons have probate records.

Estates Files: Family researchers find probate records useful in identifying family members of the deceased, which are often listed in the will, or if there is no will, in other probate documents, particularly in the “application for letters of administration,” which name the estate's administrator, and other family members who have an interest in the estate. The records within the files vary, with most 19th century ones not containing forms, like the letter of administration. The records have been stored so that the will and the application for administration if they exist, are the first records found in the file.

The records also contain detailed descriptions and values for real (land), and personal property (such as money, household goods, and farm goods), in the estate. Legal descriptions of land, and sometimes deeds and mortgages, are found.

Heirs Files: Besides “Estates” files, there are “Heirs” files, which record guardianships. Many of these are for children of the deceased, who are supported as minors by the estate. Other guardianships are established by the court for persons described variously in the records as “of unsound mind,” “incompetent,” “old and infirm,” and other descriptors. These are noted in the index.

There are also heirs files, mostly labelled “Guardian's Account,” not indexed here, but in the Court Records Index, and can be obtained in the Court Records Box indicated in that index.

If a probate file for a particular person is not found in the Probate Index, a researcher should consult the separate Wills Index (on-line or in hard copy in the Library.) There are several places, besides in probate records, where wills are found, and the Wills Index incorporates all these held in the Research Library.

Copies of probate documents can be made for $1.00 a page. This is the same charge as for Clerk's Office copies, and helps to support the Research Library's preservation costs, which have amounted to thousands of dollars for acid-free materials and storage.
